DRISCOLL A CHANGED MAN.

HE HAS BECOME MILD OF SPEECH AND MUCH MORE TRACTABLE.

Getting dependent on the day of execution approaches. His life after the execution of the man who was hanged for the murder of a woman, Driscoll has become much more tractable.

The gas was still burning in cell No. 3 in the new murderers' row at the Tombs when Driscoll awoke this morning. It was 8 o'clock, and daylight was at least half an hour overdue, but in that gloomy prison darkness lingers affectionately.

The condemned man had been restless all night, getting up every hour or two and pacing his cell nervously. At 4 o'clock he fell into a sound sleep, which promised to last until the day, but now the noise and bustle attendant upon the change of the death-watch disturbed him and he sat bolt upright on the edge of his cot.

Deputy-Sheriffs Burke, Curran and Canahan, wearing by their long night's vigil, put on their overcoats and hats and went home to get needed rest, and Deputies Crawford, Lavery and Young took their places.

"What will you have for breakfast, Dan?" asked Lavery, a messenger from Mr. Walsh having just made his appearance at the further end of the passage.

"What do I care?" answered the Why chief, with a yawn. "They can send me what they like."

A tray covered with a spotless white cloth came into his appearance. It was furnished with two substantial slices of broiled ham, a pot of hot coffee, poached eggs on toast and Saratoga potatoes.

Driscoll ignored his breakfast until the coffee and the eggs were cold and then fell to with a zest that would have done credit to a day laborer. Except the empty plates very little was left on the tray when it was taken back to the kitchen.

Despite his hearty appetite, however, Driscoll is said by his keepers to have become quite a changed man within the past few days. With the rapid approach of the time fixed for his execution he has become milder of speech and much more tractable.

He reads the papers carefully, and except when Mr. Howe makes a personal visit, and talks to him about the execution, the condemned man seems very dependent. He listens respectfully to all that Father Gellius or the Sisters of Mercy say to him, and rarely speaks a word himself.

The only thing which really rouses him from his stolidity is the daily visit paid him by his quiet, care-worn little wife. She comes regularly at 1 o'clock and spends the greater part of the hour with him.

They talk of family matters and she brings messages from his friends.

Yesterday Driscoll made the remark that his wife had cost him $1,400, and said that it was money to him.

His friends had gathered together so much money. His wife mentioned by name had a dozen Sixth Ward clubs and societies which had given him $1,400.

The timber and iron bolts for the scaffold stored near the Franklin street gate of the prison yard. They will be put together tomorrow by the four men who have been charged with that duty for several years.

Mr. Howe left for Albany at 10 o'clock this morning to ask the Court of Appeals judges to hear him in behalf of a new trial for Driscoll. It is expected that he will be set down for argument by him at once after the city and move in the General Term at 10:30 o'clock to-morrow morning for a stay of execution pending the decision in Albany.

LONGABORD'S LIFE IN PERIL.

District-Attorney Fellows Thinks His Case a Grave One.

District-Attorney Fellows this morning before Recorder Smyth moved the trial of Giuseppe Longabardi, the handsome boyish Italian artist who shot Johnny Barrett, the sixteen-year-old son of Policeman Thomas Barrett, on Oct. 16, from the hands of the defense of Longabardi, but on their request Frederic Couderc and ex-Judge Horace Russell were assigned to the defense of the poor artist.

Afterwards a postponement was asked to give time for a motion for the appointment of a commission to examine Francesco Costan and other witnesses, who had been called to the stand, and who had been called to the stand.

The motion was never made before the Recorder, but to-day ex-Judge Russell answered the inquiry of himself and Mr. Couderc to act, and asked for the assignment of ex-Judge George M. Curtis, who had consented to defend the accused, and for another postponement of the trial.

Col. Fellows said he was not disposed to be hard on this young man. I believe his case is one of great gravity, and that he is in great peril.

Recorder Smyth adjourned the court until 10 o'clock to give time for ex-Judge Curtis to appear.

Not to be Somebody's Darling.

Mrs. Marie Stronach, of 301 East Ninety-fifth street, who is young, pretty and kind of heart, was waiting for a call at Eighty-ninth street and Third avenue last evening, when a middle-aged, poorly dressed woman asked her to hold a baby for a minute. The woman said she was the child's aunt, but the woman did not return. Then she took her prize to the East Eighty-ninth street Police Station. To-morrow, if it is not claimed, it will be sent to Randall's Island. The infant is a girl, three days old.

Poker Against Pistol.

Robert Benson, ticket seller at the Eden Music, and some friends were in McGarry's saloon, at Twenty-ninth street and Seventh avenue, last night, when a fight occurred between him and Daniel Coogan, his brother and some friends. Benson was wounded on the head with a pistol, and Coogan was beaten on the head with a pistol. Benson and Coogan made counter charges against each other in Jefferson Market Court this morning and were held for examination to-morrow afternoon.

Gibbs On Deck.

The special committee of the Republican County Committee that has been investigating into the machine methods of the wicked ex-Senator Frederick C. Gibbs has finished its labor. The report will be made to the Republican County Committee at its next meeting. The ex-Senator and his followers are very joyous.

Badly Hurt While Sweeping the Street.

While sweeping the street in front of 164 Broadway this morning William Delia, of 89 Ninth street, was knocked down by a Broadway car and received internal injuries which may cause his death. He was sent to Roosevelt Hospital.

Judgment Against the Broadway Road.

In the suit of Mrs. Josephine G. Valentine for damages for personal injuries tried in the Common Pleas, a verdict was returned this morning against the Broadway and Seventh Avenue Railroad Company in the sum of $4,000.
